The a cappella band Les Brünettes can look back on over 16 years of music, friendship and creative adventures. Since 2010, Juliette Brousset, Stephanie Neigel, Julia Pellegrini and Lisa Herbolzheimer have taken stages by storm with their unique sound and established themselves as one of the leading female a cappella groups. Music and friendship are inextricably linked in this band: what began as a musical collaboration has developed into a deep personal and creative bond.

They have released five albums, sung into the Beatles' microphones at Abbey Road Studios, performed at the Elbphilharmonie in Hamburg, accompanied the HR and WDR Big Bands, and featured on *heute journal*. They sing in French, Italian, Spanish, English and German, have won awards - and have also started families along the way. The fact that things don't always run smoothly doesn't seem to drive the four of them apart, but rather brings them closer together. Supported by brilliant colleagues, the ensemble has continued to evolve. Young jazz students have become acclaimed interpreters of the Beatles' music, arrangers and songwriters who have even released an album consisting entirely of their own compositions. In doing so, each of the four is able to shine in her very own way.

The concerts promise an exciting musical journey through the highlights of their career - from their early beginnings to award-winning performances on international stages. With their characteristic passion and energy, Les Brünettes manage to enchant their audience time and time again. It's not just die-hard fans who can look forward to favourite tracks and classics from their previous programmes.
