

It doesn't matter

A comedy by Marius Mayenburg

Simone, a career woman who feels she is suffocating in her job, misses her own bed whilst on a business trip - whilst her husband Erik, who can only swap housework for something more creative through the occasional editing or translation job, envies her for being able to "get away%$. So Simone and Erik get bogged down in an argument that turns into a fundamental discussion about their roles within their relationship - and thus into the question of whether they still matter to each other or have become irrelevant.
