The Dutch cabaret artist PATRICK NEDERKOORN has been performing on German stages for several years now. In his second German-language show, DER FLIEHENDE HOLLÄNDER (The Fugitive Dutchman), he shares his amazement and experiences with his large neighbour. Why do the Germans have so many rude sayings? Are there more speed cameras or regulations in Germany? And why is the German tax programme "Elster" named after a thieving bird?

DER FLIEHENDE HOLLÄNDER is a refreshingly funny and musical show that weaves personal stories with topical issues. The Amsterdam-born cabaret artist talks in a charming, disarming and humorous way about borders, love, family and tax. And about how to bridge the gaps between people. Quite simply, the funniest form of international understanding.

Patrick Nederkoorn is known from the SAT.1 programme DIE BESTEN COMEDIANS DEUTSCHLANDS - and as a Dutchman, that's saying something. With his first show, DIE ORANGENE GEFAHR, he was nominated for the PRIX PANTHEON and won the KOMIKER JACKPOT.

The show is a collaboration with the Kom(m)ödchen in Düsseldorf.
