The resolute pensioner Jacqueline actually wants to move in with her friend, neighbour and lover Jean. But there is stress: the workman does not finish, hardly a wall is left untouched, Jean does not want to part with things she has grown fond of and finally calls off the move.

Jacqueline flees her flat. At first she wants to stay with her son Nicolas. But he turns her mother away, he has other problems - his wife has left him.

Jacqueline is forced to live with her eldest daughter Carole and her son-in-law for the time being. The film combines well-timed dialogue wit and misunderstandings into absurd humour.

88 minutes, Director: Èric Lavaine
