In the course of the "German Colonial Exhibition", some Herero and Nama from the colony "German Southwest Africa" come to Berlin in 1896. The students, who are taught according to the evolutionist race theory that was common at the time, are supposed to measure and observe the guests in detail. This is how the doctoral student Alexander Hoffmann meets the interpreter of the group, Kezia Kambazembi. He develops a great interest in the Herero and Nama and begins to question the racist theories. Under the protection of the imperial army, he travels through Namibia after the warlike uprising and collects artefacts and artifacts left behind for the Berlin Ethnological Museum. Secretly, the student continues to search for evidence for his counter-thesis and for the interpreter Kezia. He becomes part of the genocide against the Herero and Nama and crosses his own moral boundaries.

116 minutes, Director: Lars Kraume
