In her early 30s, Julie (Renate Reinsve) is still unsure about what to do with her life. Does she want to study medicine, would she rather work as a psychiatrist or become a photographer? She also has to make a decision about her love life, mostly following her first instinct, which initially leads her into a relationship with Aksel (Anders Danielsen Lie).

But while he wants children, Julie struggles with the idea of ever having children at all. It's up to Julie herself to make the big decisions for herself, even though she could become the "worst person in the world" in the eyes of others....

A refreshingly insightful film about a woman caught between two stools in every sense of the word and having to face the overload of possibilities.

Excellent film
