Kasper is employed as a journeyman at an old mill. There he has to hoist the sacks of ground flour onto carts. The old miller keeps pushing him to work faster, and in a few moments the king will come to collect the fine flour. The miller is impressed by the rich and educated king, but what else does an old miller have to offer but his beautiful daughter Helene. The miller's daughter would be a good match for the king because, the old miller says, she can spin straw into gold.

And so the story takes its course. The beautiful Helene has to prove her skill. As she wanders around in doubt, she meets a little man who has mastered this art…
