Work on the Aasee cycle path continues

Closure established for next construction phase on the south bank

Work on the new cycle path at Bocholt's Aasee is continuing with immediate effect. A closure has now been set up for the next construction phase. Cyclists cannot use the path between the pedal boat landing stage and the bridge at the Aasee inlet, according to the city of Bocholt.

The closure of the approximately 230-metre-long path, which is expected to last several weeks, is unavoidable in the view of the administration. However, pedestrians can continue to use the area between the DLRG building and the pier of the pedal boat rental.
