What we do

The aim here is to support employable recipients of the citizen's allowance in such a way that they will be able to support themselves from their own resources in future. In order to determine the individual need for support and derive from this what specific support can be provided, detailed counselling is carried out with a specialist in case management.

As a rule, every applicant is offered a case management appointment shortly after their first visit to the job centre.

In the subsequent counselling sessions, the situation is jointly analysed. In particular, the professional competences, but also the topic of health and the general life situation are important. Based on the findings, personal goals and how to achieve them are discussed and defined.

There are a wide range of support options here. They range from counselling and activation assistance, job application assistance, job-specific qualifications and language training to support in taking up employment. In this context, the Bocholt Job Centre cooperates with various regional training providers.
